As a critical piece of our overall health, brain health allows us to communicate, make decisions, problem-solve and live a productive and fulfilling life. Brain health conditions, on the other hand, are associated with disruptions in normal brain growth and/or brain functioning. This special feature, published during Brain Health Awareness Week, will highlight the importance of brain health and its impact on Canadians.

Proposed topic highlights:

Strategies – Focus on brain health promotion and injury prevention, including healthy aging.

Research – New findings on the determinants of brain health and lifestyle options that boost outcomes.

Resources – Where to find support for patients with brain health conditions and their families.

Awareness – Advancing understanding about the impact of neurodevelopmental and neurological conditions.
