The list of challenges for patients with a rare disease is long. It usually starts with a delay in diagnosis and is followed by difficulties finding appropriate treatment and care. While this often results in considerable social and financial burdens on patients and their families, advances in policies, research and treatments offer new hope.

Proposed topic highlights:

CANADIAN PATIENTS – We highlight the plight of Canadians diagnosed with one of over 7,000 rare diseases, such as neuroendocrine tumours.

DIAGNOSIS & TREATMENT – Advances in identifying and treating diseases characterized by a broad diversity of disorders and symptoms.

RESEARCH & INNOVATION – New findings and options promising hope.

OUTLOOK – Strategies for helping patients and their families cope with rare diseases.
